Conditions of use and data protection statement

When accessing this website, potential identification data (IP address) and other data (date, time, viewed pages) will be stored on our server for data security purposes. The data will not be used otherwise, except for statistic purposes and for that purpose it will be treated anonymously. It is our aim to protect your privacy. We use the collected information about you in accordance with the Data Protection Act in its current version.

Personal data include information on your identity, for instance, your name, e-mail address or postal address. You are entitled to file an application to be informed free of charge about the personal data that has been stored about you. Additionally you are entitled to have false data corrected, to bar and delete data. All data you transmitted to us will be treated confidential and will not be handed to third parties.

Security

When accessing web pages or data within our website and being requested to enter data about you, please note that the data is transferred over the internet and is therefore unprotected and could be seen or falsified by unauthorised third parties. If you have any further questions regarding the data protection please contact us.
